

I, Hassaan Qazi, hereby want to comment regarding the FCC's vote to dismantle Obama-era net neutrality regulations.

I, ardently, and in the strongest terms possible, wish to condemn the FCC's upcoming stance against net neutrality. Not only is net neutrality a fundamental right that anyone and everyone accessing the Internet is entitled to, but net neutrality goes a long way in ensuring the First Amendment rights of freedom of speech are respected online.

By curbing the safeguards set up to ensure net neutrality, the FCC falls in danger of indirectly curbing the First Amendment rights we the people are entitled to. By not ensuring net neutrality, freedom of speech online is not ensured, as it should be. Verbal assurances from ISPs do, as it not mean anything of conclusive nature without sufficient governmental oversight, as corporations primarily operate to ensure profits, not morality.

Consequently, I urge the FCC to backtrack on its decision to rescind provisions ensuring net neutrality, as doing so severely undermines the constitutional right of Americans to enjoy freedom of speech, as guaranteed by the First Amendment.

Sincerely,

Hassaan Qazi
